Derwentwater and Latrigg, Cumbria

The wooded shoreline and nearby fells are perfectly reflected in the glassy surface of Derwentwater. This alluring lake is dotted with islands, with footpaths around the shore and up to the dramatic fells and crags. Latrigg is a small, easily accessible fell north of Keswick, leading into the Skiddaw range.

Hadrian's Wall, Northumberland

This striking defensive wall was built by the Romans under Emperor Hadrian in AD 122 against a northern invasion, a chain of forts, towers and mile castles, guarded by thousands of soldiers. Viewed above a snowy landscape, Hadrian's Wall follows the undulating natural landscape for 117km (80 Roman miles).

Cavendish, Suffolk

Immaculate thatched pink cottages stand in front of the tower of the Norman church of St Mary in the quintessentially English village of Cavendish on the River Stour, where the Sue Ryder Foundation was formed. Characteristic Suffolk colour-washed houses line the huge village green, which hosts many events.

Mynydd Carningli, Newport, Pembrokeshire

One of the most striking hills in Pembrokeshire, rocky Carningli looms over the town of Newport, with magnificent coastal and inland views. It was once a volcano that erupted around 450 million years ago. Its name means Mountain of Angels and is associated with St Brynach, a 6th century missionary.

Roman Baths, Bath, Somerset

Founded by the Romans as a temple and bathing complex, Aquae Sulis derives from the UK's only hot springs. Fed by water at a temperature of 46.5°C, the original Roman baths were covered but are now open to the air. Pillars and statues were added in the 19th century. The Great Bath still uses Roman plumbing.

Bibury, Gloucestershire

Once described by the artist William Morris as 'the most beautiful village in the Cotswolds', the village of Bibury has many 17th century stone houses with picturesque cottage gardens, and a fine Saxon church near the square. The River Coln flows sleepily through the village under a three-arched stone bridge.

Godrevy, near Portreath, Cornwall

Facing the Atlantic, east of St Ives Bay, the exposed beach at Godrevy is popular with surfers. Godrevy Lighthouse is set on an offshore island. It was made famous by Virginia Woolfe's book To The Lighthouse. The headlands are rich in wild flowers, and basking sharks are often seen in summer off the coast.

Newton-in-Bowland, Lancashire

An autumn view of trees with glorious foliage, along the banks of the River Hodder that flows under a stone bridge. This tranquil village, nestling amid the stunning scenery of the Forest of Bowland, was the early home of John Bright the Quaker and statesman, and the Friends Meeting House dates from 1767.

Calton Hill, Edinburgh

In the 19th century, Edinburgh was envisioned as the 'Athens of the North'. Classical revival buildings on Calton Hill include the National Monument, designed as a replica of the Parthenon in Athens, the City Observatory and the monument to mathematician Dugald Stewart. There are fine views over the city.

Botany Bay, near Broadstairs, Kent

At the foot of towering white cliffs, where sea erosion has created caves and chalk stacks, is a beautiful sandy beach. At low tide the soft chalky rock pools, full of marine life, can be explored and fossils found in the chalk. Its name comes from the fate of smugglers transported to Botany Bay, Australia.

Ingleborough, Yorkshire

One of Yorkshire's Three Peaks, 723m high, with a distinctive flat top, Ingleborough's slopes form a natural limestone terrace. It dominates a landscape of gritstone-capped peaks, underground cave systems and exposed limestone pavements, created from huge expanses of rock pressurised by glaciers.
